

Quantum Overthinker

Heisenberg says I can't quite know both where I am and where I go and with thoughts like particles, I flow with movements that make my confusion grow.

Both yes and no and up and down, I can't figure out whether to smile or frown, while my emotions flow in waves unbound, for I do often act like Schrödinger's clown.

The moment someone takes a glance, is when I feel like I'm out of the trance;
the emotions end their confusing dance, and collapse at once without a chance.

Yet once they leave, the spin begins, and the noise inside regrows its fins, catching its speed, removing any grins, and the cycle continues, with no kingpins.
